Directions: Read the passage.

The Seminole tribe of Native Americans began when members of the Creek tribe migrated to Florida in the 1700's and united with other tribes. Their language is similar to the Creek language.

The Seminole were organized into clans, or family groups. The tribe member belongs to his or her mother's clan. The most important ceremony of the Seminole culture is the Green Corn Dance. During this harvest ceremony, many Seminole people come together to pay gratitude to the Creator for providing food and nourishment. One of the many rituals at this event include "stomp dancing" where men follow a spiritual leader in single file while women dance around them.

The Seminole lived in Florida until 1842 when many tribe members were unjustly forced by the government of the U.S. to move to Oklahoma.
